16.3.4 - Does your university as a body provide a neutral platform and "safe" space for different political stakeholders to come together to frankly discuss challenges?

The university does not have a clear policy providing a neutral platform and "safe" space for different political stakeholders to come together to frankly discuss challenges, but all activities conducted by students to freely voice out and without fear their opinions and thoughts regarding the Thai government (such as shown in the pictures above) are not prohibited and they highly supported by providing them materials and space where they could do these kinds of activities. There is one thing that is requested from the student body, i.e. to inform the university, so the university can provide appropriate support security.
